

SMALL TOUR IN FRIULI VENEZIA GIULIA

Day 1 | Venezia

10.30am - 5.30pm

Short and intense tour starting from St. Erasmus (the garden of Venice), as readable model of the formation process of agricultural and of settlement land, where you can see the formation of the settlement (rural and urban) and of the territory: the island, full of linear watery basins (fish ponds, dug up to obtain fill soil, where the fish is bred or kept alive), lined with banks and lapped by waterways. Moving then to Murano (the island of glass) which has both mature settlement forms, extremely dense (compact textures with the characteristic bipolar amphibious water-land system, developed in depth, even up to more than one hundred meters, for the production needs of the rolling of glass cane beads), and recent low density settlement forms and even soils of more recent, controversial, colonization.

Un unusual visit to understand the essence itself of the lagoonal city and to bring back home an unforgettable memory.

Unique chaperon: Guido Masè, architect and former professor at IUAV of Venice, expert of the ecomuseum world and member of the Technical Committee of Friuli Venezia Giulia ecomuseums.

Lis Aganis - Ecomuseo Regionale delle Dolomiti Friulane

The ecomuseum was born by an impulse from the Community Initiative Leaders in August 2004. Lis Aganis, mythical female figures who live around streams and caves, have always maintained an ambiguous and ambivalent relationship with humans. They populate the legendary world of many Alpine countries. With different names and characteristics. For the ecomuseum it was chosen the story from the oral tradition which is told in Colvera Valley, in the Pordenone foothills. "Once upon a time there was a poor woman with many children to grow. One day she met a salamander on the bank of a stream and helped her give birth... the salamander was an agana that in gratitude gave her a ball of wool whose thread was endless. With that tangle, she sewed sweaters and socks for her children, and then generously donated it to other women who were in this way able to provide for their loved ones... The ball passed in that fashion hand in hand and it is told it still continues to be generously donated". The ball is the heritage of the area, resource to use together, each one in its own way, as needed, without exhausting it; it is the thread of memories, it is the wealth of knowledge and traditions that must be preserved and passed them on to future generations.

Panoramica di Villa Manin di Passariano

Villa Manin

In the heart of the Friuli plain, where the stony "magredi" meet with clay soils to form the largest area of water springs in Europe, Villa Manin is presented in the eyes of the visitor, as an authentic "jewel" of art and history. With its 8,500 square meters of rooms, corridors, paintings, historic buildings, the Chapel of St. Andrew and eighteen hectares of landscaped gardens, it is not only one of the greatest Venetian villas in Italy, built in the Friuli on plain in the historic moment of the eclipse of Venetian trades towards the East and the consequent aim of the Serenissima to expand towards the mainland, but it also embodies the European dream of one of the largest and most prosperous families of the Republic of San Marco, with huge properties spread from Polesine to Istria, ambitious to the point of wanting to rival the most lavish courts of the continent.

Val del Lago

Ecomuseo della Val del Lago

The ecomuseum has been promoted and established in 2007 by "Comunità Montana del Gemonese, Canal del Ferro and Val Canale" along with the municipalities of Bordano, Trasaghis and Cavazzo Carnico. It has a precise territorial connotation because it is formed by the territories bordering the Cavazzo Lake, where the Somplago hydroelectric plant operates since 1957: both the lake and the community histories are at the center of its activities. Beyond the customary approach aimed to the knowledge of the territory and therefore the acquisition of awareness about its values, Ecomuseo della Val del Lago intends to address the issue of local identity by starting a process of recognition of its territory which, working on memory and not on longing, is placed in the current days investigating the specific meaning of identity. The ecomuseum aims to become a sharing pattern of choices about territorial government on the use of natural resources as a sustainable way and then as a place of conflict management and resolution.

Paesaggio gemonese

Ecomuseo delle Acque del Gemonese

Born in 2000 to preserve and promote the material and immaterial heritage of Gemona, Ecomuseo delle acque del Gemonese aims to document, retrieve and interpret the historical memory, life, figures and facts, culture, relationships between natural and man-made environment, traditions, lifestyle and working practices, local production, but also the way in which the settlements and the works of man have guided the evolution of the landscape and the Osoppo-Gemona field, a geographical unit full of moist environments and hydraulic works. In this area the population has intervened for centuries, taking the waters and administering the underlying hydrographic network, digging irrigation ditches and raising embankments, erecting factories and producing energy. The Ecomuseum perspective is to guide the future development of the territory to a logical environmental, economic and social sustainability, of responsibility and participation by both public and private entities and by the entire local community.

Monte Canin

Ecomuseo Val Resia

Val Resia is a pre-alpine valley surrounded by wild nature, inhabited by a population that has been able to maintain over the course of time its secular language, culture, customs. Every country has its own name, its own voice, the melody, the beauty of the archaic language, rich in history and written on the ancient pages of this valley thanks to sacrifice and hard work, stubbornness to maintain a tradition preserved until this day. An ancient history, but still alive and full of legends, myths, fairy tales, songs, ways of understanding life. And then there's the music: a few notes handed down from memory but which you play with skill and ease with zitira, bunkula and the blink of foot, a dance music that drags you in, that vibrates and embraces people with joy.

Ecomuseo Val Resia is a set of physical and ideal paths to walk with body and mind to explore the valley, reaching its most characteristic places to understand the essence and the natural and human history that distinguishes them.

Veduta di Paularo

Ecomuseo | Mistîrs

Paularo is at the center of Valle d'Incarojo, and represents the headquarter of economic and social activities: all around the hills are dominated by a chain of mountains Sernio, Zermula and Tersadia. It is a homogeneous area, thanks to the specificity which it bears: geographical, natural, landscaping, economic, socio-cultural. The Ecomuseum manager is the municipality of Paularo, that promoted the establishment of a committee which includes all the associations and the local entities which perform cultural activities and safeguard the assets of the community, the "know how" of Paularo. There are permanent exhibitions and animations, but at the end of August the village turns into a showcase of Carnia traditional crafts thanks to the Fieste dai Mistîrs festival. The festival is the culmination of an action that has been developed all year long, aimed at the enhancement of the entire valley through the involvement of the local population.

Day 5 | Ecomuseo Territori

Ecomuseo Territori

Ecomuseo Territori protects and enhances the cultural heritage and the environment of the territory between Carso and Isonzo, to make it known and to share it with both the occasional guests and with those who live and work there. This active conservation action relates to all the testimonies of the past and the "savoir faire" inherited from the generations that preceded us, to encourage knowledge and transmission through the active involvement of the inhabitants. The ecomuseum considers the resident population the first person to whom is entrusted the protection, the renewal and the communication of the identities and values of the territory, promotes research, educational projects, documentation initiatives and cataloging of the material culture, the environment and the history of the territory, also through the collection of diaries, memoirs and interviews.
